Too many deaths

The First Wave of coronavirus started in February and ended in June 2020.

A report by Public Health England says 1000 people with a learning disability died from Covid-19.

What the report says - a summary

People with a learning disability were six times more likely to die than other people.

500%
more risk

Sometimes a learning disability was used as reason not to resuscitate someone.

Those aged 18 to 34 were thirty times more likely to die.

Extra health problems like diabetes or breathing difficulties made some people more at risk.

Sometimes carers didn't spot when someone was getting really ill.

There are other reasons not in the report: PPE, tests, clear information and more to find out.
